14. ABSTRACT
The U.S. Army has been charged with developing capabilities to fight jointly and with coalition partners, to win across the full spectrum of warfare, while continuing the transformation to a lighter and more lethal force. This conference will present government, academia and industry perspectives on existing operational, logistical and technological challenges. It will discuss how these challenges are being met, while ensuring that the transformed force has the necessary advanced armament systems to successfully achieve decisive victory in all operations, from small-scale contingencies to major-theatre warfare.
